We've seen fall army worms on flue and fire cured tobacco in recent days. It's the first time that I've observed these insects feeding on tobacco.

Apparently they feed on weeds, particularly pigweed, and migrate to the tobacco. They begin feeding on the lower leaves and work upwards. Therefore, spray materials must be directed to the lower leaves and pressure increased.

Two materials will control the insect - lonnate or orthene. Since the latter is the safest to handle, I'd rather go with it at the rate of one pound per acre.

We had an excellent turn out for the summer meeting of Appomattox Dairymen's Association. By count there were 42 attending the annual affair at Hix Brothers' Farm.

There is leptospirosis in several dairy herds here in this county. This is a disease that affects dairy and beef cattle. Therefore, everyone with a herd needs to be on a vaccination program. For a number of years those who have been vaccinating have used only one strain; now that other strains have been identified, the dairy herds vaccine should be used. Some veterinarians are recommending vaccinating dairy herds every six months and beef herds annually. Check with your veterinarian for recommendations.

In recent weeks, we have observed off - type tobacco plants on two fire-cured tobacco farms. This is of great concern if you find them in your crop, we would like to know about it. They will not cure like regular fire-cured tobacco and will have to be sorted out.

Making corn hay is an alternative way of utilizing drought stressed corn. If the stalk has an ear and it is run through a conditioner or cut with a rotary mower, the ear will be lost. If a rotary mower is used, there will be additional soil on the feed.

Bailing can be accomplished with either the regular rectangular baler or large round or stack bailer.

If there are no ears on the stalk, a "hay bine" or rotary mower can be used. When a rotary mower is used, the product is improved by increasing the throttle and reducing PTO speed. If ears are to be retained, the corn should be cut with a sickle mower. If corn is picked, the stalks can then be cut and bailed.

Bailed corn should not be higher than 30% moisture to prevent molding.

As may be expected, baler adjustments will be required to accommodate this feed and greater wear does occur.

SAVINGS PLUS INSURANCE

Endowment insurance is essentially a savings plan with insurance to protect the savings program against premature death. The semi-compulsory nature of the premium serves as an incentive to savings and is probably the main reason for the purchase of this type of contract.

Typical endowment insurance plans provide for the payment of the face value of the policy upon death of the insured during a fixed term of years. If the insured is living, endowment plans also provide for the payment of the full face amount at the end of this period.

Due to the heavy savings element, the premium payments are the largest of all life insurance plans. When used correctly, endowment insurance furnishes the proper balance of protection and a sure means of accumulating a definite sum within a specific period of time.
